

GALLERIES & ARTISTS (continued)

In October, Pen and Brush, the national organization for women in the visual, literary, and performing arts, presented its annual Brush show. The juror was Fine Art Connoisseur editor Peter Trippi, who awarded the top three prizes to Aubrey O'Meara, Jennifer Murray, and Ruth Channing, with honorable mentions to Ginny Howsam Friedman and Hilda Green Demsky. Founded in 1894, Pen and Brush (penandbrush.org) operates from a landmark townhouse in Greenwich Village and hosts more than 70 events annually.

Cincinnati's Treadway Gallery is offering an affordable array of etchings, pastels, and drawings made by the local artist Edward T. Hurley (1869-1950), all provided by the artist's son and daughter. In very good to excellent condition, these highlight Cincinnati landmarks and beauty spots as they appeared in the early 20th century, when Hurley thrived as both a fine artist and decorator at the Rookwood art pottery. Having studied under Frank Duveneck at Cincinnati's renowned art academy, Hurley was inventive in all his media, even winning a gold medal for originality in pottery at the 1904 world's fair in St. Louis.
